

SKATE.NOW

A Push in the Right Direction

June 1, 2017

Dear Program Directors,

My name is Evan Dittig, I run Skate.Now, a global skateboard network specializing in skateboard instruction. At Skate.Now we use skateboarding as a tool to help better the world. Craig A Salerno, a Clinical Director at NorthStar Transitions Residential Treatment Center, informed me of awesome organizations in the Boulder and Denver regions that may be interested in our service!

I am reaching out to offer free therapeutic skateboard lessons to the patients of local clinics. Skateboarding is a fun outdoor recreation activity that builds self-esteem, promotes creativity, and cultivates a resilient mindset. We will be in the Colorado from July 10- 16 and we would love to set something up, I believe that your patients will benefit tremendously from our program!

Here is a little bit more about our program: Skate.Now was launched in 2015 and we have helped over 150 children and adults learn the basics to skateboarding. We are based out of New Jersey and we have taught clients ranging from age 4 to age 65 all along the east coast. Skate.Now has partnered with multiple non-profit organizations to host a number of charitable events and teambuilding workshops. We just returned from our trip to Nicaragua where we donated skateboard equipment and lessons to schools in order to help transform underdeveloped communities.

Skate.Now's therapeutic skate lessons will be instructed on beginner terrain teaching low-risk basic maneuvers to our participants. We are comfortable working with participants of any age and those with no prior skateboard experience. We will be fully covered with general liability insurance and participants over age 18 must sign a liability release form, which will waive the risk from either party.

We are confident that working with Skate.Now would be an amazing experience for your organization and the participants involved! If you are interested, I would love to speak further with you on the subject, I will be happy to answer any questions you may have! You can reach me directly at (973) 868-3636 or at evandittig@gmail.com. You can check out more of our work at learntoskatenow.com. I am looking forward to hearing back from you and the possibility of setting up an amazing program for your patients!

Best Regards,

Evan J Dittig, Director, Skate.Now
